AUTUMN WINTER '26

Drifter's Journey

Among the trees where stillness stays,
Woodland walks and winding ways.
Cabins built from timber strong,
A place where quieter moments belong.

Morning mist upon the lake,
Gentle ripples softly break.
Smoke drifts slowly through the air,
Peace is found in moments there.

Layer by layer, piece by piece,
A quieter way to find your ease.
Timber, water, earth and sky,
The best things never have to try.

Fresh air carried through the pines,
Time slows down and clears the mind.
Leave the rush a world behind,
Take the moment, leave renewed.

Time to sit, time to slow,
Watch the fire, let thoughts flow.
Beyond the glass, the woodland calls,
While quiet settles through it all.

A moment still, a place apart,
No need to rush, no need to start.
Warmth within and trees outside,
Let the hours simply glide.

Layers of texture, cloth and grain,
Built for comfort, built to remain.
A quieter pace, a clearer view,
Time to think, and time for you.

A full-body photograph of a man with light brown hair and a slight beard, standing on a wooden deck. He is wearing a bright blue zip-up jacket over a dark navy t-shirt, and blue denim jeans. His hands are in his pockets, and he is looking off to the right. The background features a large window with a black frame, reflecting the surrounding greenery. To the right, there is a wooden wall and a dark wooden railing. The lighting is soft, suggesting an overcast day.

DRESSED FOR WHATEVER THE PLANS.

The weekend fades, the journey ends,
Back to the roads, the noise, the friends.
The woodland stays, the memories remain,
Until we find our way again.

Homeward bound, with time to reflect,
On simple moments we least expect.
The fire, the water, the open air,
A slower pace we take from there.

One journey ends, another will start,
New roads to follow, new places to chart.
Wherever we wander, wherever we roam,
Every good journey leads us home.
